

Week 6 Pawmpts: Set your story in a world where conversation about one particular topic is banned— but there are ways to get around the rule. | You are a unicorn that is hunted in a world of werewolves. Vampires are in this! | They treat me like nothing... They treat me like trash. But...

It's been a few days since Lily started her training with Rane. The feline woman showed her different ways to attack, while also having her project her own energy. Lily ended up being able to shoot out stars from her paws. She'd spread her digits— expelling the bright orbs out of her paws and striking the training block with it.

Smiling, Rane patted her head. "Good job. We're making progress."

Lily blushed, wagging her tail rapidly. "This is great! Are we doing anything else today?"

Rane hopped back, setting her hair ablaze while getting in a stance. "I was thinking we should check out one of the outer planets, see if we can help out anywhere!"

"Sounds fun!" Lily barked, oblivious to the feline in her fighting stance. "Are we going to be fighting bad guys?"

She dashed at the mutt, grabbing her by the chest and gently slamming her on the ground. "Something like that... now watch out!" She reeled her fist back, throwing a punch at her face.

Yelping, Lily rolled out of the way and hopped up. She threw two punches, then emitted numerous stars from her paws. Rane evaded with ease, then dashed around, commencing with a roundhouse kick. Another yelp left the maw of the canine, ducking the fierce leg.

"Where could we possibly be going?" Lily backed up, then sprayed another bunch of stars at Rane.

The feline woman dashed around the stars, grabbing both of Lily's paws and pulling them behind her back. "I technically can't tell you that one!"

Lily struggled to get away from her grasp, but she stopped struggling as much overtime. "What do you mean? Are all the missions secret?"

Rane tightened her grasp, whispering in the dog's ear. "In a way, yes. But information about any mission is strictly for the Elemental Lords, Star-Pup."

The canine woman let out a tiny whimper. "Can't I get a pass? Since I'm a... special guest?"

Immediately, Rane spun Lily around, then flipped her with ease— she put the canine woman back on the ground. "I mean, I could..." she had pinned her, staring into her eyes.

Lily had a blush spread across her face, reaching her ears now. “I-I won’t tell anyone i-if that’s what you’re worried about!”

Rane’s hair returned to normal as she kept the dog on the ground. “It’s forbidden for me to do this, but... higher ranking Lords like me get a say in who they can tell,” she giggled.

“Ri-Right...!” Lily responded. “Then would a beautiful Lord like you tell me what we’ll be going against this evening? Or at least I think it’s the evening...”

Rolling off of the canine, Rane was on the floor next to her now. “I’ll happily let you know. We’re going to see if the Dark Werewolves are after the Light Chariot or the Unicorn— as we call it.”

The canine sat up. “Dark Werewolves? Unicorn? That sounds like it’s out of a fairytale! Though everything up to this point has been wild and magical... what could they possibly be chasing after the Unicorn for?”

“They want to steal their light,” Rane explained. “That’s why a Lord has to go check on that area every so often. Which is why... you’re coming with me!”

Lily’s tail thumped against the floor. “Awesome! I can’t wait to—”

Instantly, the feline got back on top of Lily, getting her maw close to hers. “Don’t let anyone know that I told you this. Or that I took you on this mission. Got it?”

“G-Got it!” The blush came back onto her face.

Rane giggled, giving her a kiss on the cheek. “Good! Let’s get going, then!”

Lily nearly melted into the ground, but she hopped up, following the feline woman. “Y-Yep! L-Let’s go!”

A while passed, and the women were outside now. Rane swooped Lily off of her foot paws, then activated her flame ability, flying through space. Lily enjoyed it more this time—taking a look at all of the unique planets that surrounded them. Eventually, they landed on a strange gray planet, landing on a cliff.

Rane set the dog down. “Welcome to Ion. A smaller planet that inhabits some smaller sections of darkness and light,” she meowed.

“Woah...” Lily glanced around at all of the different structures made out of black and white rocks. She noticed that there was a unicorn bolting away from a group of wolves made of shadows. “W-We have to help them!”

Nodding, Rane’s hair continued its sporadic flames. The feline woman opened her maw, making flame fangs come out. “Follow my lead! I’ll be your flaming vampire today!” She propelled herself off of the cliff, heading down to the commotion.

Panicking a bit, Lily glanced around, then decided to slide down the cliff. She hopped off halfway down, screaming—because she didn’t realize what she was doing. Then a heartbeat passed...

She was hovering.

The stars in her eyes sparkled as she gradually floated down after Rane. Her tail rapidly wagged in the air. “I’m coming, Rane!”

Rane dropped down in front of the wolves, and they split into two groups. She twirled and brought her paws into the air. The feline woman conjured a wave of flames that collided into the first half of the pack, disintegrating them. She looked up in the air, eyes wide with surprise.

Eventually, Lily landed near the unicorn, and the other half of the wolves charged towards her. The unicorn hid behind the canine, fearing for its life.

“Show them what you can do, Star-Pup!” Rane called out to her.

The canine woman froze for a heartbeat, unsure of what she could do. Then she remembered her stars, but would they be enough?

Should I punch them as well? She pondered in her mind.

Rane flew up into the air, calling out to the dog again. “You have to make a quick decision!”

Without another thought— Lily made her paw into a fist. She then slammed it into the ground, and it rumbled. Stars sprouted out of glowing cracks, making an enormous wave that crashed into the other half of the wolves, getting rid of them. The sheer power surprised Lily. “Oh my gosh...”

The unicorn hugged Lily. “Thank you so much for saving me!”

Flying over, Rane landed next to Lily. “That was... spectacular! I didn’t know you had so much power in you! We’re going to have to look into that!” She looked at the deep cracks Lily left in the ground. “Especially since we don’t know how much you can use at once...”

Numerous emotions went through the canine woman’s head. Excitement was the main one that flourished out of her. “I-I did it!”

The feline woman gave Lily a smooch on the cheek, purring. “You sure did! Let’s get back to my place and plan for more stuff like this! Plus, we have to see if we can train you to fly...”

Lily’s face got extremely red, and her tail wagged faster than she could imagine. She was ready for whatever was next for her in this strange galaxy.

-

Ivy the meerkat strolled with Armitox through the Poison Town. The rabbit talked about something, but she was too busy in her own mind.

They treat me like nothing... They treat me like trash. But they don’t understand how great I really am. She thought. They don’t see how strong I am, or how unique I am.

I can do much more than they think.

I'm not just some lousy, quiet therapist...

I am me.

And that's better than the whole galaxy.

“Ivy!”

She snapped out of it, bumping into Armitox on accident. “Y-Yes?”

“Pay attention!” He scolded her. “I have no time for you to space out. We have things to take care of.”

Ivy nodded, putting her head down. “Yes sir. Sorry sir.”

Exhaling, Armitox continued his walk. “There are a few more buildings we have to explore...”

The meerkat listened, keeping her head lowered as the rabbit man talked about their task for the day. She kept her ears open, but her mind still wandered off as time went by.

I can do so much more...