

It had been many months since Sisu became the caretaker of her micro planet. She has flown from solar system to solar system, meeting many extraordinary micro civilizations. Unfortunately, none of them were as accepting of joining her as her first planet had been. Many thought she was trying to get an easy meal, while others didn't like the idea of change. She did get a few micros occasionally, which she and her nations on the outside and inside of her belly welcomed with open arms, but her first planet was alone in her stomach, with only her belly walls to keep it company. At least her nations were improving with each passing day, with some of the old cities on the planet being rebuilt by the reformed macros that destroyed them, and the crops the nation on the outside had grown to be more fruitful than they had ever seen before. However, even then, Sisu's motivation was waning. The micros on and in her kept her going, motivating her to keep going, including the husky who believed in her since the start, but in the back of her mind, she wondered if she would ever get the trust and appreciation from any other planets than hers. On one of those days, she was flying through space aimlessly, and after passing another uninhabited planet, she saw a few flickering lights approaching her. She was confused, never seeing such a phenomenon before, and let them come, soon seeing that they were tiny spaceships. Well, tiny for her anyway. Compared to the micros on her body, they were huge. They were larger than any house they owned, but they were still so tiny that she was surprised that she ever saw them. She saw the pilots within them, thanks to the windows that they had, and they were about as small as her current micros, if a bit bigger. In the end, she just stayed still and did her best to not seem intimidating, as she wondered what they wanted from her.

Once they got close to her, she heard some strange sounds coming from them. They didn't seem like a language and more like beeps, so she wondered what that was. She asked her people for advice when her Husky friend had an idea and wrote down the beeps, noticing that some were long and some were short. He also noticed they were repeating, so she took one sequence, and, with a space communications book he found, he saw that it was the Space-Farers Universal Morse Code and wrote it down on his notepad to find out the signal spelled out three letters. 'SOS'. He then ran to Sisu's ear, with the book and notepad in hand, and told her they were looking for help. She was surprised and looked back at her friends and tried to ask them what they wanted help with, but they kept sending the same signals, seemingly not understanding them. Sisu was getting confused at this point, wondering what to do, when she heard some more beeps coming from her ear, as the Husky had set up his own transmitter to try to communicate. At that, the beeps started to change, still long and short, but in different sequences this time. After a moment of beeps and translating, the Husky translated it and told her what they were trying to say to them. They had heard of an amazing dragon named Sisu, who had saved a planet from devastation by a macro and was traveling the cosmos in search of more worlds to help. They were part of a search party to find her, and they wanted to bring her to their planet, as they needed help to save it. Sisu didn't even think about it for a moment, absolutely loving that she could finally help others again, and agreed to check out their planet, letting her new friends show her the way to their world while she wondered what they wanted her to do.

Sisu and her space friends flew through space for a while, going faster than Sisu had ever gone before as the spaceships brought her with them at light speed, and they eventually made it just outside the planet's atmosphere. At it, Sisu and all her micro friends were shocked at the sight, seeing storms and devastation all around the planet, with a ruined oasis of cities that seemed to be getting overtaken by the storms as well. Sisu looked like she was about to cry as she was sad at seeing the sight and asked her space friends what happened. They have been dealing with a terrible macro from another planet, which has attacked them for years. They had created many tsunamis by jumping into their ocean, drinking all the water from many places, and turning them into deserts. Eventually, they made so much havoc that the planet started creating storms, destroying what remained. After their latest attack, many of their remaining cities were in shambles, and unfortunately, they didn't have the resources to repair them or the time to do so before they came back. So they sent spaceships out in every direction, hoping to find help from someone like her to help repair the cities and hopefully the entire planet so this level of devastation would never happen again. Sisu continued to look at the destruction, horrified at what had happened, and she knew that this was her chance to be the hero once more. So, before the spaceship pilots could ask her for help, she raced towards the planet, ready to save it before it was too late.

On the way down toward the planet, she knew that she would be too big to fix it in her current size, so she stopped just outside of the planet's atmosphere and started flying in a relatively small circle, all the while discharging the water into a wet sphere, shrinking her and everyone else upon her, until she was merely the size of a large country. She knew that the damage she had to fix was massive, so hopefully at this size, she could quell the storms and heal the planet. She then started her descent down to the planet, taking it slow as she had to fly through the storms, as landing straight on the oasis would be too risky for its residents and Sisu's own. As she flew through the storms, she saw the lightning strike the ground, making it charred as whatever was left was burning. The smoke was terrible, Sisu and her micros coughing from it, so she used her water powers to stop the smoke from getting to her body, a water shield surrounding her body as she neared the ground. Only by then could she make out what looked like a dozen large footsteps on the ground, but upon further inspection, it was actually a former mountain range stomped flat down into the ground by the macro. She didn't know where it was, but she knew she had her work cut out for her if she wanted to save this planet. Soon enough, after flying several times around the planet, she made it to the ground just in time to get out of the storm and land by the oasis. At that, she nodded to the micros within the cities, who seemed scared of her arrival, before turning towards the storm, ready to save the inhabitants from further harm.

It was an early morning for the people of the oasis when she started healing the planet, using her powers to first attack the storm. She brought her tail up to the storm and began harnessing the water from it, shrinking the storm as it lost its water supply. She didn't want to mess up the planet's water supply, so she used the water she harnessed and soaked it into the deserts, slowly turning them back into fertile land. She, however, wanted to take this carefully and consulted the inhabitants, with the help of her Huskey friend to translate, and figured out the best places to divert the water to, as it would be best to restore it to what it was before the devastation. As she continued to quell the storms, she heard the cheers from the people and saw their happy faces as their new dragon friend brought hope into their lives. Sisu smiled at them, glad to bring a smile to their faces, and continued to quell the storms. Along the way, she also found some of the fires that were started by the storms and used her water powers to put them out, drowning the fires in the water while manipulating the water to ensure anything still living didn't drown by the water, and to ensure any trees and structures were kept safe, and even repaired the ruins she found along the way. Eventually, the storm had completely settled, and all over the planet, the skies were clear. As she was about to pour the rest of the water into the ocean, she noticed that that much water would flood the mainland, so she carefully filled it to what it should be, put her tail into the skies, and made clouds all over the skies, not too much to cover it, but enough to let it rain as usual whenever the clouds got bigger. After that, she returned to the oasis, which was hard to find as much of the earth was green again, and rested for a moment as the devastation was over, but there was still so much to do.

At midday, she stood up and continued to work on the planet. She first used her powers and, with the schematics of what the cities are supposed to be, she safely let the water flow across the city, which didn't affect the residents within as they were filled with the air they needed to breathe, and the wreckage was being repaired. The skyscrapers were being brought back up, their glass being remade as the steel beams straightened, and before everyone knew it, their city was restored to its former glory. She did this to every other city and town she could find, including some long abandoned ones, in case the inhabitants ever wanted to move there again. She then went into the fields and used the water to erode the ground in such a way to where it was like it was plowed before using the local's seeds to plant new plants into them and having them grow into the crops that would feed them for the years to come. She then went to all the land formations that were destroyed by the evil macro and used her water, along with the waters in the oceans, to flow underneath them, raise the crushed mountains high into the air, and push down the valleys that were filled with rubble by the macro. Eventually, as the sun set, Sisu looked over the land again with a smile. The land was fertile again, the world's wonders restored to their former glory, and the people were happier than they had been in history. Even the micros on and in Sisu's body congratulated her, including the Husky, who had organized many of the other micros to give her pets all around her body for a hard day's work. She enjoyed it all, happy that she had done so much, and went back to the city's outskirts and laid down next to it, taking some time to rest while everyone celebrated.

Sisu let out a yawn wider than the atmosphere as she woke up, her eyes droopy as she was still tired even after a good night's sleep. She stood up, shaking off the sleep in her eyes, and looked back toward the city, smiling at seeing everyone cheering for her. They congratulated her for how much she had done for them, and even though they could never repay her, they at least wanted to see her off. She smiled and, having learned their language since then, thanked them by saying, "Wow, thank you so much. I-I can't believe you organized this just for me. J-Just hearing all of you cheer for me makes it all worth it. T-Thank you so much." As she had not gotten so much cheering from a planet since rescuing her first planet, she was overjoyed and had to ensure her tail didn't bounce on the ground in glee. She wondered what to do next and considered asking if they wanted their planet gobbled up and safely brought into her belly, but she dismissed the idea. The planet was in better shape than ever, and the macro was nowhere to be found, so there was no need to take it with her. So, she instead asked them before heading off, "Um, so, I'm about to head back into space to help more planets from macros, so might I ask, do any of you want to come with me through the cosmos? I understand if you want to stay here and rebuild society, but if you want to join me, my micros will welcome you with open arms. Hehehe." She wanted to ask them not because of having more micros with her during her journeys but because many of them would never get the chance to go into space, and since they knew she was safe, she was sure that at least a few would accept the offer. Indeed, many agreed, either getting on her back or entering her maw to join the planet in her belly. Before taking off towards new worlds, she waved at them once more before taking off past the atmosphere and into the universe beyond.

Many years after leaving the planet, having many new adventures, saving more worlds, and even gobbling up a few along the way, she found herself back in the solar system of the planet, which helped change her perspective on what it meant to save a world, and checked it out to see what's happened since. For one, she found that the macro reformed, having gotten bored of destroying the world as it was so quickly repaired, and has helped make a home of his own as he travels across worlds to gain the resources on his own section of the planet. They have also created a monument to their favorite macro, a long metal dragon dam modeled after Sisu that helped regulate the waters around the oasis of cities she saved. When she saw that, she started to tremble, and her eyes began to tear up, overjoyed at seeing something like that made just for her. "O-Oh my. I-I... Thank you all so much. T-This is amazing." Tears of joy started to fall from her eyes onto the ground below, landing at the monument's feet as she heard the micros of the land sing a song of praise to her. After several minutes of this and she recovered, she noticed that her tears made a large lake in front of it, and decided to add one last detail to the monument by using her powers to create rivers that magically come from the feet of the monument down into that lake, which would always have fresh, clean water flowing into it for the years to come. After seeing how great everything was, she let the original inhabitants that joined her see how their planet was doing and stayed for a while, ready to tell them all the tales she had of her amazing adventures throughout the cosmos.